

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) is sponsoring a study to learn more about Behçet's Disease. We are looking for people who have Behçet's Disease or symptoms of the disease such as mouth ulcers, genital ulcers, skin lesions, or eye pain, redness, and swelling.

If you are enrolled in the study, you will complete several in-person visits at the NIH's Clinical Center in Bethesda, MD. The visits include:

- Medical exams by a team of specialists;
- Collection of blood and saliva samples for testing;
- Other medical tests recommended by specialists in the field, if we receive your permission.

Participants also complete study questionnaires each month.

If you are interested in participating or want more information, please contact Elizabeth Joyal, BSN at 1-888-996-4267 #6 (toll free) • 301-435-4489 • ejoyal@nih.gov
